Girl, you can!

ONTO matters more serious and praiseworthy. Filmmaker Hansal Mehta is in London with his wife Safeena Husain, to cheer for her as she receives a prestigious award for her work towards educating girls. Safeena founded a NGO, Educate Girls and has since 2007 grown from a 50-school pilot project to a reach of a million kids in 7,500 schools. Safeena's exemplary work and commitment has earned her the Skoll award for Social Entrepreneurship, which recognises innovation and impact on solving the world's most pressing problems. Safeena is one of the four recipients of the $1.25 million (each) for a period of three years. Mehta, who has often spoken of his wife as his inspiration and pillar of strength, said he could not miss the awards event for the world. "After all, I only make films, she does all the hard work," he said to us before boarding the flight.
